

Organ and tissue donation

Donate life and give our people
a second chance of life.

Talk about it today

Have you ever thought about organ and tissue donation?

Donate life and give
our people a second chance of life.

Did you know that our people are more likely to be offered an organ
from our own people because they will be a better match?

Yet aboriginal people often reject
organ donation for cultural reasons.

You know our culture will live on afterwards, and you will be helping our people to live on today.

Many of our people are today on dialysis or awaiting an organ transplant, and have been for a long time.

It's important to make a decision and to tell your family what you would like to do if you are ever in that situation. You know it's your family who will give the final OK.

I wanted to be here for my kids

I didn't know I was sick. I just had a headache and went to see the doctor. That was about nine years ago. I found out my kidneys were no good and that I had diabetes.

I started haemodialysis straight away, and for about two years I was on the transplant waiting list. Then about five years ago I had two little heart attacks, and they have taken me off the waiting list now. I understood what the doctors were saying because it's a big operation, and anything could happen. I didn't want to take that chance, because I wanted to be here for my kids and I care for my two grandsons aged 13 and 17.

If I had received a kidney transplant I would not have to come to hospital three days a week and I would be out and about doing things. My eldest son offered to give me a kidney but the doctors said no, because he may also develop diabetes.

A lot of indigenous people are getting sick from different diseases. It's not good.
